MINISTERS DEVISE SPECIAL FEATURES FOR WORLD'S FAIR.

Members of Evangelical Alliance Decide to Hold General Meetings During the Exposition Period-Provide for Appointment of Committees to Formulate Plans for Their Building.

mittee was discussed, and it was resolved: "First, that the Alliance plan for the holding of general evangelistic meetings during the period of the World's Fair be dopted. "Second, that an Evangelistic Committee, consisting of two representatives from each denomination represented in the Alilance, one of whom shall be a layman, be ap-pointed to take charge of these meetings and that the various ministers' meetings be requested to appoint their representations on this committee."

A resolution in reference to the appoint-ment of a Committee on Building and Ex-hibits was adopted. It reads as follows: "Resolved, that a committee, composed of two representatives from each denomination represented in the Alliance, one of whom shall be a layman, and to be known as the Building and Exhibit Committee, be appointed to confer with like committees appointed by other religious bodies in ref-erence to plan of building and exhibits, and that the ministers' meeting be requested to appoint their representatives on this com-

The chief discussion was on that recommendation of the World's Fair Committee which provided, in case the building request-ed of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company is granted, that "the Alliance engage to make an effort to have the religious bodies represented in its organization make full use of so much time and space as the authorities in control may allot." The Reverend Doctor M. G. Gorin, pastor of Cook Avenue Presbyterian Church, South, took the position that in such recommendation the Alliance assumed to legislate for the donominations in question, and also that such action would lead to all sorts of en-tangling alliances, both as to the matter of Church. South, who said that the action proposed would inevitably result in the holding of a "Parliament of Religions." The vote, however, showed that these two opponents of the resolution stood alone, theirs being the only votes cast in the negative. All the recommendations were adopted unanimously, and, in addition, the action taken by the Alliance at its called meeting, October 7, relative to the form of the petition for the building was confirmed.

The Reverend S. I. Lindsay, who had been appointed to secure the signatures of other appointed to secure the signatures of other religious bodies, reported that the petition for the Religious building had been signed also by Archieshop Kain in behalf of the Catholic interests of the city; by Rabbi Samuel Sale, representing the Jewish inter-ests of the city; the Right Reverend Daniel S. The population of the mushroom city will be composed of thousands of laborers who are to build the Louislana Purchase Exposition.

As yet the location of "Taylor City" has not been definitely determined, but it is probable that it will occupy a portion of the tract lying between the south end of the site and the Missouri Pacific tracks. The object of the settlement is to afford homes to the armies of workmen which will pour into St. Louis when active building commences.

LION AND THE BEAR PLAN AN ALLIANCE IN FAR EAST?

An Article, Apparently Inspired by Government Officials, Outlines in Detail a Scheme by Which Russia's Interests in Manchuria and England's Rule in Yang-tse and Afghanistan May Be Protected and Both Countries Prepared to Meet and Combat Germany's Colonial Policies.

KAISER IS NOTIFIED THAT ENGLAND IS READY FOR WAR.

London, Oct. 28.-The November number of the National Review will contain a strik-ing article advocating the establishment of an alliance between England and Russia, mainly for the purpose of counteracting the alleged serious hostility of Germany toward Great Britain. The article is written anonymously, but the Associated Press is in position to state that it is the joint contri outlon of writers who not only thoroughly understand the subject, but are on intimate terms with members of the Cabinet, though the National Review distinctly disowns any Government inspiration for the article, Under the title of "British Foreign Policy," the article, first of all, asserts that the "naval policy and avowed hostility of Germany, to which even the British official world can no longer remain blind, will force us to keep on a war footing in the North Mediterranean or Channel squadrons." Origin of South African War. Dealing with Germany's part in the in-trigues against England consequent upon the South African war, it is stated that neither the United States, Japan, Austria nor Italy has at any time been even re-motely implicated in these intrigues. The real origin of the South African war was want of a clear and definite policy in that part of the world," and this statement is followed by a review of colonial unity, in which Goldwin Smith's work, "The Em-pire," published in 1863, when the author ica a fleet as powerful and efficient as the was regius professor of history at Oxford, is referred to as follows: "A book which was received at the time with no little approval-not only advocating the disruption of the British Empire, but actually advising the surrender of important military positions. It is yet profit-able to read the obsolete language of the learned professor, if only to note how cruelly events hastened to stultify his prophecies and to derive entertainment from the self-opinionated insistence with which he announced the decline of conquering tendencies among nations."

Gladstone in Favor of Dismemberment The interesting statement is made that in 1873 Mr. Gladstone told one of the writers of the article that "he considered it would be a grand thing for England if she could get rid of the colonies, and he quoted Sir George Cornwall Lewis, who passel for a sagacious man, as being of the same Reverting from colonial to foreign policy, the article forcibly traces the growing hos-tility to England, with a careful apprecia tion of Germany's growing naval and com-mercial strength: "She is already stronger at sea than either France or Russia." Bue low's avowed contempt for England is shown by quotations from his recent speeches: "It is galling to Englishmen." these writers state, "to reflect that Germany was rewarded for failing to raise Europe against us by an Anglo-German agreement securing to Germany the re-embodies a policy as antagonistic to itus-sia as the German naval programme is hos-tile to England."

Anglo-Russian Alliance. No insurmountable difficulty, it is held, prevents Russia and England arriving at a basis of mutual understanding. "The late Emperor Alexander expressed his desire for the continuous and the present Emperor Emperor Alexander expressed his desire for such a settlement, and the present Emperor is credited with the same disposition."
Individual cases of trouble and even treachery between English and Russian diplomats have, it is admitted, occurred, but "We doubt whether in the whole range of diplomatic intercourse it would be possible to point to the behavior of one great Power to another more audaciously cynical in its disloyalty than the conduct of Germany to England over what Count von Buelow and been pleased to christen the 'Yangtse' Agreement,' except perhaps the treason of Prussia to her allies on the occasion of the Peace of Basel."

How the Plan Would Work.

treason of Prussia to her allies on the occasion of the Peace of Basel."

How the Plan Would Work.

The recent incident of Koweit is taken as being a striking instance of Germany's dislike of England, for it is alleged that "Germany was undoubtedly egging on the Sultan of Turkey" in his endeavor to establish a protectorate over Koweit.

"The keystone of British policy in the Far East is a friendly understanding and co-operation with Japan; but that being recognized, there is nothing to prevent this country from supporting a settlement of the Manchurian and Korean questions on lines which would be regarded as fairly satisfactory both in St. Petersburg and in Tokio. If the Korean question were regularized, Japan would have considerably less reason than at present to apprehend Russian schemes, and Russia, on her part, might devote herself to developing her Far Eastern dominions, without risk of interruption from Japan.

Inducements Held Out to Russia.

"Russian statesmen have to make up

"Russian statesmen have to make up their minds whether, in the puesent condi-tion of Russian industries, Russian agri-culture and Russian finance, a friendly un-derstanding with England, which would relieve her anxieties in the Far East, and which might result in her being able to continue her Transcaucasian and Siberian railways to the shores of the Persian Gulf, and which, last but not least, might enable her to carry out her historic mission in the Balkans, is not worth a high price."

On these bases the following suggestions for an Anglo-Russian understanding are submitted:

submitted:

"With regard to the Near East, the basis would be that, whilst Russia abstained from any attempt to interfere with the status quo in Egypt, we should frankly recognize that the fulfillment of what Russia regards as her historic mission in the Balkan Peninsula conflicts with no vital British interests, and that in Asiatic Turkey we should abstain from favoring the development of German schemes of expansion.

II.—Persia and Central Asia.

"With regard to Persia and Central Asia.

"With regard to Persia and Central Asia.
we might offer Russia our co-operation in the development of railway communication between the Caspian and the Persian Gulf, and in securing for her a commercial outlet on the gulf, in return for an undertaking on the part of Russia to respect the political status quo along the shores of the Gulf, and to recognize our protectorate over Afghanistan.

III.—The Far East.

taking on the part of Russia to respect the political status quo along the shores of the Gulf, and to recognize our protectorate over Afghanistan.

"With regard to the Far East.

"With regard to the Far East, the question is necessarily more complicated, as Japan would have to be taken into the counsels of the two Empires and a basis of agreement arrived at which would satisfy her as well as Russia and Great Britain.

"As far as Japan is concerned, such a basis might be found in the recognition by Russia and England of the Japanese claim to an exclusive sphere of influence in Korea. Japan would presumably, in return for this concession, have no objection to a formal agreement, under which Great Britain would recognize Russia's claim to regulate her political and commercial position in Manchuria and Mongolia by direct negotiation with China, and Russia would, in like manner, recognize Great Britain's claim to regulate in the same way her political and commercial position in the Yangste Valley, each Power binding liself to give no support in those regions to the enterprise of any other Power. With regard to all other questions in China, Great Britain, Russia and Japan would agree to take no steps without mutual consultation.

"The fact of Russia being a party to such an agreement would give France a guarantee that her interests would be taken into due consideration, while our participation would afford a natural safeguard to the commercial interests of the United States.

Would Dampen a Powder Magnaise.

"The effect of such an agreement, accompanied by the customary demonstrations in such cases, public declarations by the sovereligns and their official representatives, and an exchange of visits by their respective fleets, would at once remove the danger of a sudden explosion, which must continue to hang over the whole world so long as the Far East remains the powder mazazine of international rivalries and conflicting interests which it is at present.

"The natural consequence of this understanding would remain ne

"Germans would, however, do well to re-alize that, if England is driven to it, Eng-land will strike home. Close to the founda-tion of the German Empire, which has hardly emerged from its artificial stage, there exists a powder magazine such as is found in no other country, viz.: Social Dem-ocracy. In the case of a conflict with Great Britain, misery would be caused to large clarses of the German population, produced by the total collapse of subsidized indus-tries; far-reaching commercial depression, financial collapse and a defective food sup-ply might easily make that magazine ex-plode."
